Case Study Information

We would like your permission to write up and use your case as a case study.

Peninsula Community Legal Centre writes up some of its cases as case studies which we keep in a secure, internal database. We use these case studies to help argue for improvements to the law or to help people understand the law and how it affects people. Case studies are very effective in these ways.

Protecting your privacy

We will take every precaution to protect your privacy.

- ◆ We will store your case study securely.
- ◆ Whenever we use case studies they are de-identified. This means we change the names and any other details that are necessary to make sure that you, the other party or any children involved cannot be identified.

How might your case study be used?

Your case study might be used when we:

- ◆ Make submissions to government, law reform bodies and parliament.
- ◆ Lobby politicians.
- ◆ Prepare articles or publications or use the media to help the public understand the issues.
- ◆ Provide training to our own staff, to staff of other organisations or to the public.

Contacting you again

We would also like your permission to contact you again in the future for research, education, law reform or media purposes.

This is completely voluntary

It is completely voluntary whether you agree for us to write up and use your case as a case study or to be contacted again in the future. This will not affect the legal assistance we give you in any way.

Consent form

If you agree to us writing up and using your case study please complete the attached Consent Form and return it to us. You can request to see your case study before it is used.

Opting out and accessing information

Contact us on 03 9783 3600 or via email pclc@pclc.org.au if:

- ◆ You no longer want your case to be used as a case study.
- ◆ You no longer wish to be contacted.
- ◆ You want to access and request correction of personal information in your case study.
